Cycle of violence might take 30 years to break

By BERNADETTE STERNE
Daily News Staff

Sister Mary John Cristobal thinks that the verbal, physical and sexual abuse that undermines families and society can be defeated.

But it will take patience. The cycle of domestic violence that is passed on from parents to children may take 30 years to break.

"Violence is a learned behavior and parents need to understand that they are the first teachers of their children," said Cristobal, the new chief probation officer at Guam Superior Court. "People need to reprogram their way of thinking about the use of violence to obtain a favorable outcome."

Reprogramming thinking of individuals and the greater society will take three generations, she said.

Cristobal said the majority of cases her probation officers handle are domestic-related. In 1994, there were 1,196 domestic cases filed at Guam Superior Court. That comes to about 3.2 cases filed each day.

Cristobal said the heavy domestic caseload causes her probation officers to be an extension of the court. Now, she said, they also want to be an extension of the community.

And by reaching out to the community, she said they can help put an end to the domestic violence cases that flow through their office.

"I perceive violence as having no reason to exist," she said. "Violence is used as a short-term payoff, but it is expensive in the long run."

The probation office will start its 30-year-long program by educating the first generation through workshops that will heighten people's awareness and

New islands, new options for Hawaii

By JOHN E. SCANLAN

Daily News Staff

Midway Island could be the site of a new prison. Or it could be an eco-tourism destination.

For years, Johnston Island has been used by the military as a toxic waste dump. In the future, cobalt from the waters around the island could bring money to native Hawaiians.

A bill introduced in Congress by Rep. Elton Gallegly, R-California, would transfer seven islands from federal control to the state of Hawaii. Now, officials in Hawaii are trying to decide how their new territory would be used.

Federal and state officials also are trying to determine how law enforcement, toxic cleanup and waste laws would be applied in the islands once they are transferred to state jurisdiction.

The islands mentioned in the bill are the Midway Islands, Johnston Atoll, Palmyra Atoll, Kingman Reef, Howland Island, Baker Island and Jarvis Island. Earlier Associated Press news reports said Wake Island also would be included in the list. However, Wake Island is not mentioned in the bill. Greg Small of the Associated Press bureau in Honolulu said yesterday that an inaccurate report was received and subsequent news stories included the error.

Hawaii's delegation of senators and congressional representatives in Washington were originally incensed about the bill because it was introduced without any consultation with them.

"The bill did catch us by surprise," said Mike Slackman, spokesman for Rep. Neil Abercrombie, D-Hawaii.

He said the representatives from Hawaii didn't have much time to consult with the state government and native Hawaiian organizations to determine if these groups had any opposition to the plan.

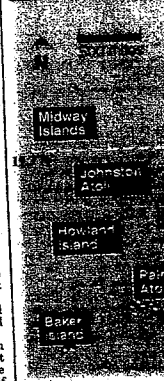

Now, Hawaiians are looking at the potential the islands hold.

In a meeting Friday, representatives from state and federal agencies, an independent development group and a native Hawaiian rights group discussed the future of the islands, and questions raised by the transfer of the islands.

Donnie Dawson, a spokeswoman for the state's Department of Business Eco-

Expanding Hawaii

U.S. Rep. Elton Gallegly proposes transferring seven islands, atoll, and reef to the state of Hawaii.

Midway Islands

1,200 miles northwest of Honolulu. An atoll 15 miles in circumference, with two islets called Sand Island and Eastern Island. A.U.S. possession since 1867. It has no indigenous population.

Johnston Atoll

700 miles west-southwest of Honolulu. Its highest point is 49 feet above sea level. It is one of the most isolated atolls in the world. Both the U.S. and the Kingdom of Hawaii claimed the island in 1858.

Howland Island

1,500 miles south-southeast of Honolulu and 35 miles north of Baker Island. Officially declared a U.S. possession in 1936, but used by Americans since 1858. Just less than one square mile in size, it has one patch of trees and other vegetation.

Baker Island

1,500 miles south-southeast of Honolulu. Declared a U.S. possession in 1936. Just more than one square mile in size, it is uninhabited, but there were American colonists there in the mid-1930s.

Palmyra Atoll

33 miles southeast of Kingman Reef. Owned by the Fullard-Leo family. Made up of 39 islets totaling 1,400 acres. It receives about 176 inches of rainfall annually and is heavily vegetated.

Kingman Reef

900 miles south of Honolulu. Owned by the Fullard-Leo family of Oahu. The 45-square-mile island is often completely submerged during high tides. Annexed by the U.S. in 1922.

Jarvis Island

1,200 miles directly south of Honolulu, just below the equator, and 1,200 miles east of Baker and Howland. 1.7 square miles in size. The U.S. took control of the island in 1935 after England abandoned it.

Hawaii: Who will pay for cleanup of toxic substances?

"U.S. law says they all do, but international law says they don't. International law only recognizes land masses big enough to regularly support habitation," he said.

He asserted that this definition would omit Baker, Howland and Jarvis.

"And Kingman and Palmyra would be questionable as well," he added.

And the question of native Hawaiian rights to natural resources must be resolved as well, Van Dyke said.

"Just below the surface of the waters around Johnston Island there are huge deposits of cobalt which could easily be mined. Native Hawaiians have a right to 20 percent of natural resources found in the former kingdom, which was illegally overthrown in 1893," he said.

Van Dyke said cobalt is a valuable resource used in high-tech and military products.

"Right now the United States gets all of its cobalt from Africa. There are no known reserves in the continental United States now. This would be a big help to the United States," he said.

Minimum wage laws

The applicability of federal and state laws on the seven islands also has to be looked into.

"Right now minimum wage laws aren't in force on Midway, where about 1,000 Sri Lankans are working there cleaning up toxic wastes and aren't being paid that much. If someone wanted to start an eco-tourism business there using these low-paid people, the business might not be economically feasible if they had to be paid the minimum wage," Van Dyke said.

Slackman added the legislation leaves numerous questions unanswered about the state's responsibilities toward the seven islands. "What kind of law enforcement will we have to put on them? This and other important items haven't been addressed," he said.

The spokesman noted the seven atolls are not near any of Hawaii's main islands. "The nearest one is more than 500 miles from Honolulu and the farthest one is over 1,000 miles away," he said.

The environmental issues discussed included the clean-up of toxic substances at Johnston Atoll.

"The military has dumped huge amounts of munitions there over the years. Will the state have to pay for cleaning that up? Obviously we'll want to know about that," said Dawson.

He said the state's economic development department. She added that all of the islands have to be treated separately.

"You can't treat all of those islands as one lump sum. But Howland, Jarvis and Baker would be better left alone because of their pristine nature," she said.

In fact, Dawson said everyone at Friday's meeting agreed that the islands' fragile ecosystems are a cause for concern.

"That's the one point everyone at the meeting seemed to easily agree on. While a diversity of opinions were expressed at the meeting about how to best develop the islands, everyone thinks their environments need to be protected," she said.

Native rights

The Nation of Hawaii, a native Hawaiian rights organization that wasn't invited to Friday's conference, wrote a letter on Feb. 6 to President Clinton about the islands.

Puhimua Kamehale, who is known as the head of state within his organization, said the islands must be formally returned to Hawaii as soon as possible.

He said the islands are considered part of the Nation of Hawaii, which his organization proclaimed to be an independent country on Jan. 16, 1994.

Hui Ne'auao, an organization composed of 47 native Hawaiian rights groups, is still considering its position on the islands, said Keoni Agard, president of the organization.

Absent from the conference was a representative for Oahu's Fullard-Leo family, who owns Palmyra Atoll and Kingman Reef.

Ainsley K. Fullard-Leo, the family's spokesman, said the family wants to know if the state will have the right of eminent domain over the islands.

"Are they going to tax our land?" he said.

Fullard-Leo said his family has owned the islands since 1922. He added his mother petitioned Congress to annex Kingman Reef to the United States.

"She must have had a hard time as many people didn't even believe the place existed," Fullard-Leo said.

Kingman Reef Becomes American

By JOHN L. PADGETT

LITTLE is known about the love-life of the polyp except that it must be satisfactory to the polyps, hence most of the South Sea Islands. A short while ago—as the world goes and grows—a colony of these minute sea lives settled and set up housekeeping on a barely submerged mountain peak and expanded. Not bothered by rents, transportation and politicians, generation after generation multiplied and lived, each on the skeleton of the preceding generation. Such is their life. Eventually the many tiers of infinitesimal bones piled up into a large sized island at low tide—a reef at high tide. The washing of the waves broke loose the dead coral and drifting currents deposited the particles on the highest point.

Later on, wandering vessels far from the regular lanes, saw the surf pounding and passed it by. Some unknown sea legend, bred in the forecastle or barroom dubbed this speck "Kingman Reef." In 1921, the Sailing Directions for the North Pacific Islands gave the correct position but then noted—"Existence Doubtful." This Federal Government printed book in one breath warned all ships to avoid the spot and in the next told the wandering seamen not to be surprised if they did not find it. Since no one was sure it was there no one claimed it. (See Paradise of the Pacific, January, 1937 for story of Kingman Reef and its being named after Captain Kingman of the American ship Shooting Star).

Mr. and Mrs. Fullard-Leo owned the nearest fleet of Islands—Palmyra. They and a Hui owned and operated the fishing sampan Palmyra with a seven-ton icing capacity. On one of her regular trips she carried in addition to Captain J. R. Lemmel and Japanese crew a party of Conchologists headed by the late Lorrin A. Thurston, myself as First Mate—polite name for cook.

The first night out we crowded into the tiny cabin, seasick, wet and sporting a "Oh well it can't get any worse" attitude. Mr. Thurston rather bravely dug out the Sealed Orders and by the dim light read them to us. We were to proceed to and report at a certain Latitude and Longitude and annex the doubtful Kingman Reef in the name of the United States of America and Mr. and Mrs. Fullard-Leo.

All we had to do was keep enough food down to live and trust Captain Lemmel to find it. The Captain deserves much credit for his navigation. For five days without a shot at the sun, by dead reckoning and with a keel-less craft of unknown drift, the Captain raised the surf of Kingman Reef at the dawn of the sixth day.

That day we fished. One ton of finny strangers came aboard. Unbelievably true fish stories every minute which no one will believe so why tell them.

At dusk we dropped the hook and all hands slept including the watch. The next morning we found ourselves inside of the lagoon having drifted over the same reef which the day before we had considered too dangerous to sail over. After fifteen years I still feel scared over that one.

Slowly we proceeded to the North end (or toe) of the horseshoe and leaving the Japanese to fish, rowed ashore. No Rube Goldberg or any D.T. imagination could describe the three hundred yards of wading through the shallows to the small dab of dry land.

Giant sea clams up to two feet in diameter, weighing up to four hundred pounds and with ten gallon capacity unfolded to display colors never dreamed of by the most demented surrealist artist. Disturbed by our footsteps they snapped shut jutting streams of water six to eight feet in the air. Our advance was preceded by a barrage of these jets and the "clunk" of the bivalves closing up.

Variegated sea anemones added more spots of color to the delicious spectrum and then closed up tight to form a lump of "goo." The only neutral shades were supplied by a ring of dull dirty grey sharks circling around and around, half in, half out of the shallow water. However they were only babies five or six feet long.

We were supposed to go to Palmyra so we went. On my return to Honolulu I was called before Rear-Admiral Edward Simpson and staff. They still seemed to believe the Sailing Directions "Existence Doubtful" but after a morning of questions let me go back to my drawing board. Shortly after this the U. S. Navy sent a Mine Sweeper down which found Kingman Reef and that made it official.

Having helped to make history while worrying about my cooking and having traveled the course in six days which the Air-Clippers now cover in a little over six hours there is still another and more lasting benefit. By that I mean the opportunity to walk and talk with Lorrin A. Thurston. That kindly gentlemen was learned in Hawaiian history, lore and legend. Ready to fight at the drop of the hat if he was assured the cause was just; kindly, considerate and enjoying the evening of his life in the pursuit of the hobby he loved. Back in the time I write of the days would have been long without him—sometimes they are now.

Today the giant Clipper settles down on the calm lagoon, a rest, then on its restless way. The polyyps continue, undisturbed, trying to make something of Kingman Reef—their work. Between the polyp and the Pan-American Airways the Pacific World is a new one.

Kingman Reef History Told

The illustrated book on Kingman Reef at the Pan-Pacific Union Research Institution last night by Dr. William O. French was preceded by an account by John L. Packard who with the late Lorrin A. Thurston 15 years ago annexed the reef for the United States.

HISTORY OF ANNEXATION OF KINGMAN'S REEF

Editor The Advertiser:

I have the intention, whatsoever, of under-taking the valuable work indicated by the late Mr. L. A. Thurston through his long and crowded career, to the Kingdom, Republic and Territory of Hawaii, the Federal Government, his fellow men and the world at large, permit us however, to add further information to the editorial of Saturday, October 31st captioned "L. A. Thurston Concerning the South Sea Islands." A staunch friend and true comrade, who has been in person, I believe, would have to give the correct history of the annexation of Kingman's Reef which I am submitting augmented by quotations from his articles printed in The Advertiser of May 22nd and July 16th, 1922, and the Christian Science Monitor of July 10th.

A small corporation known as the Palmyra Copra Company, of which I was the Palmyra Islands from the late Henry H. Copra, for the copra and other resources, but with copra down to nothing decided to bring fresh fish for the Hawaii market. It was resolved that a competing hull with foreign capital was about to be set up and annex an unclaimed fishing base near the Palmyra for a foreign country. The Secretary of the Copra Company promptly consulted Judge S. Huber, then U. S. attorney in Hawaii as to the formalities required to annex land for the United States and hastened the departure of the company's motorship with sealed orders to Capt. Herman Lemmel to proceed directly to the only known unclaimed reefs or land in the vicinity of Palmyra. Weeks before this Mr. Thurston and party of shall collectors had been given permission to go to the islands for a holiday. (Quoting L. A. T. "I stumbled into this proposition as I was accidentally as though I had stubbed my toe, fallen down, and all on a pot of gold." Two days before sailing, Mrs. Thurston told me the theory that Kingman's Reef might be an island and not a "Dangerous Shoal," as ascribed to it by the North Pacific Pilot Guide, published by the U. S. government. "Would it be as good as attend to annexing it if it were a true enough island? Would a fish swim? If the lady had but known I would willingly have become a material asset of the company in paying for the privilege. No sooner said than done, I was handed the following commission:

Mr. Lorrin A. Thurston, Honolulu, T. H.

"Dear Sir: As an agent of the Palmyra Copra Co., Ltd., a corporation under the laws of the Territory of Hawaii, you are hereby commissioned to leave on the company's motorship Palmyra on or about the 10th May 1922, and proceed to a certain group of coral holes situated as Kingman's Reef situated approximately to four miles 182 West and 161 North, 8 North, not having been claimed by any other government or people, and take formal possession of the same on behalf of the United States of America and claim the same for this company. Signed L. Fullard-Lee, Pres.; E. Fullard-Lee, Sec. Treas.

Also with the following accompanying instruction:

"Dear Mr. Thurston: The enclosed documents I believe to be in order for the matter verbally discussed with you, and the proceedings will be as follows: Captain Lemmel is being ordered to call at Kingman's Reef on his way down, and weather permitting, make a landing of your party and such of his crew as he may desire. You will please examine what ever land there is, gauge its extent and scientific value while the captain will take correct observations to be inserted in the document to be left there, duly signed, witnessed, etc., securely placed with a flag of the United States and copies of the local papers, in a glass jar herewith supplied. Your party will kindly make a beacon of stone or coral and erect on the same a pole which will appear conspicuous and safely deposit the jar with its contents at its foot. With the return of the boat please send me a full description together with photographs if possible, and return the copy duly filled out as per the original document deposited on the island. All this, providing there exists no trace of a former possessor. I know you will get a real "kick" out of this and wish you every success, at the same time thanking you for your timely assistance.

Yours sincerely,

(Signed) E. FULLARD-LEE, Secretary

An exhaustive description of his findings was sent back by the boat and published in The Advertiser, the annexation document supplied was signed by Mr. Thurston and his five companions and sent by the Copra Company to the State Department in Washington and duly acknowledged. A copy was filed with the Archives in Honolulu. At a stockholders' meeting of the Palmyra Copra Co., held on August 14th, 1922, a resolution was passed and unanimously adopted to cede to the United States all the company's rights of whatever nature in the newly annexed territory in return for sundry unsecured loans. Although according to press dispatches from Washington last year Kingman's together with Wake and other islands were placed under the jurisdiction of the 14th Naval District, the Territorial tax office has collected taxes to date its assessment for 1923 reading—Key 391-38 "Land Palmyra Island and Kingman's Reef."

To much credit cannot be given Mr. Thurston for his intense study, exhaustive research and loyal efforts to make Kingman's a national asset. All his findings were placed at the disposal of the government with this note: "The ownership of this island and harbor has been secured by American citizens and jurisdiction handed to the American government on a plate. I submit that it is now proper policy for the government to take time by the forelock and have a detail survey and report made on Kingman's island and harbor to supplement the present meagre information concerning Kingman's Reef." Over a period of several years he persisted and these quotations are typical of the spirit that dominated this man. To Admiral Simpson in July 1922, "I feel that the unusual opportunities which I have had for obtaining some knowledge upon the subject place an obligation upon me to make such knowledge available for the national good."

To Admiral Coontz in 1923, "I have no interest in Kingman's or Palmyra, directly or indirectly other than as above set forth, American citizen, however, I am strongly interested in what may in the not distant future, prove of vital interest to American interests in the Pacific."

Thanking you for your valuable space, we are, sir,

Faithfully yours,

Let Us Away To Kingman's Reef! Cries Spalding

Retired Banker Honing To See One of Those Thurston Sharks

E. I. Spalding, retired banker and man of affairs, said yesterday that he cannot help feeling very keenly the lapse from the simple paths of truth and virtue shown by Lorin A. Thurston, proprietor of The Adventure. He has always had a very high personal regard for Mr. Thurston and believes that, to re-establish his old friend in his own and the public's esteem, it will be necessary for the Inter-Island Steam Navigation Co. to run a special excursion steamer to Kingman's reef in order that first-hand piscatorial evidence can be had.

"I don't believe a word about these forty-foot sharks that take a 100-pound ulua at a single bite, or chase the sailors up the masts of a sampan," Spalding remarked in saddened tones. "If 'Jock' Kennedy will send the Kiluea down to Palmyra in order that we can find out the facts, I guarantee that we can fill the ship with fishermen. This is an important matter. It ought to be settled!"

'Friday' Tools Strong for Trip To Palmyra Isle

"They may talk all they want to about the fish yards and the like," said Manuel Vasconcellos yesterday morning, "but let me tell you one thing. All that has been said about the fish and sharks in the waters surrounding Palmyra is, gospel truth. Vasconcellos, better known as 'Thurston's Men Friday,' was one the deep water of the lagoon is approximately 250 to 300 feet. The lagoon drops precipitously at the edge, to a depth of 45 fathoms.

Thick reef between the deep water in the lagoon and the island is awash, making shallow, though somewhat rough, wading with some coral heads projecting above the water.

It extends to the right and left as far as the eye could reach.

It consists, to the very water's surface, of the most wonderful growth of living coral of many species that I have ever seen.

Has Real Coral Garden

The "coral gardens" at Kaneohe and Waialua are jokes compared with this coral garden at Kingman's, as they consist largely of dead coral, whereas every square foot of Kingman's coral garden consists not only of living coral and sea shells, but many of the corals are of the most delicate varieties, some so fragile that it is difficult to even gather them without their breaking. Some of the long branching variety with branches 18 inches to two feet long, so brittle that while fishing with an ordinary fishing line, in 24 feet of water, branches a couple of feet long became entangled and were broken off and brought to the surface.

A patch of this fragile branching coral was growing on the reef where we landed, on the very edge of the deep water of the lagoon. Neither in this patch nor any of the other fragile species in the same vicinity was there any broken coral, although our wading ashore crunched through them. If even a moderate surf from across the lagoon had fallen upon these corals it would have crushed them into fragments.

Also, bearing upon this point is the vital fact that on the other three sides of the island—north, east, and south—there was no live coral, the intervening area from the island and to the outer reef being a platform of dead coral, swept almost bare by the waves, with the exception of slabs of dead coral known as "coral shingles."

I submit that the logical conclusion from the foregoing facts, is that the waves which sweep over the outer reef but are broken by the outer sides of the island on the north, east and south, do not enter the lagoon on the west side.

Dominates Smooth Water Under these circumstances, even

which bearing upon the question of the cause as to warrant further and early investigation.

The following facts are within my personal observation and knowledge. They appear to me to constitute strong evidence that the Kingman's lagoon is sufficiently protected from outside ocean swells, so that, as far as this point is concerned, it can be made into a safe harbor.

Evidence Bearing Upon the Safety of Kingman's Lagoon.

At a Harbor

On May 10, last, a normal north-east trade wind was blowing at Kingman's, with the normal trade wind swell and chop sea—about what there is in our inter-island channels—producing the usual surf, which was rolling in from the north, east and south, at the early apex of the atoll.

The island lies at this apex. It is like the head of a comet, the two sides of the encircling reef, on the north and south sides of the lagoon, trailing off from each side of the island to the westward, like the comet's tail, to such a distance that the westerly extremities were not in sight.

While the surf was rolling in heavily from the three directions indicated on the outside, the water in the interior of the lagoon, on the fourth or westerly side of the island, was absolutely smooth—even glassy.

We landed on this west, or leeward side of the island. There was not even a ripple on the water, or the edge of the reef where we stepped from a small flat-bottom skiff.

Every few moments there was a rise of the level of the water at the reef edge, of perhaps two or three inches—more like a breathing than a wave.

I submit that this indicates either that the lagoon is enclosed by a protecting reef practically all the way around, or else that the open portions are so far away from the island, or comparatively so shallow or narrow, that the force of the outer waves is dissipated.

Not Being Wave-Swept
Evidence that the island and the lagoon are not wave-swept, is that the entire surface of the island is covered with black vegetable mold, which would not be the case if it

YOUNG DRANGA TELLS OF PALMYRA TRIP IN LETTER TO FATHER

HUO, Hawaii, May 29.—T. A. Dranga received a letter from his son Theodore, by this morning's mail, dated "Palmyra, May 4," in which the writer tells interestingly of his experiences at Palmyra Island. He writes in part as follows:

The islands are lovely and covered with big trees of three kinds, many of them filled with roosting birds. In the lagoon are lots of small sharks, from two to four feet in length, and these may be seen swimming with fins and tail exposed in water only eight inches deep. With other kinds of fish the lagoon fairly swarms.

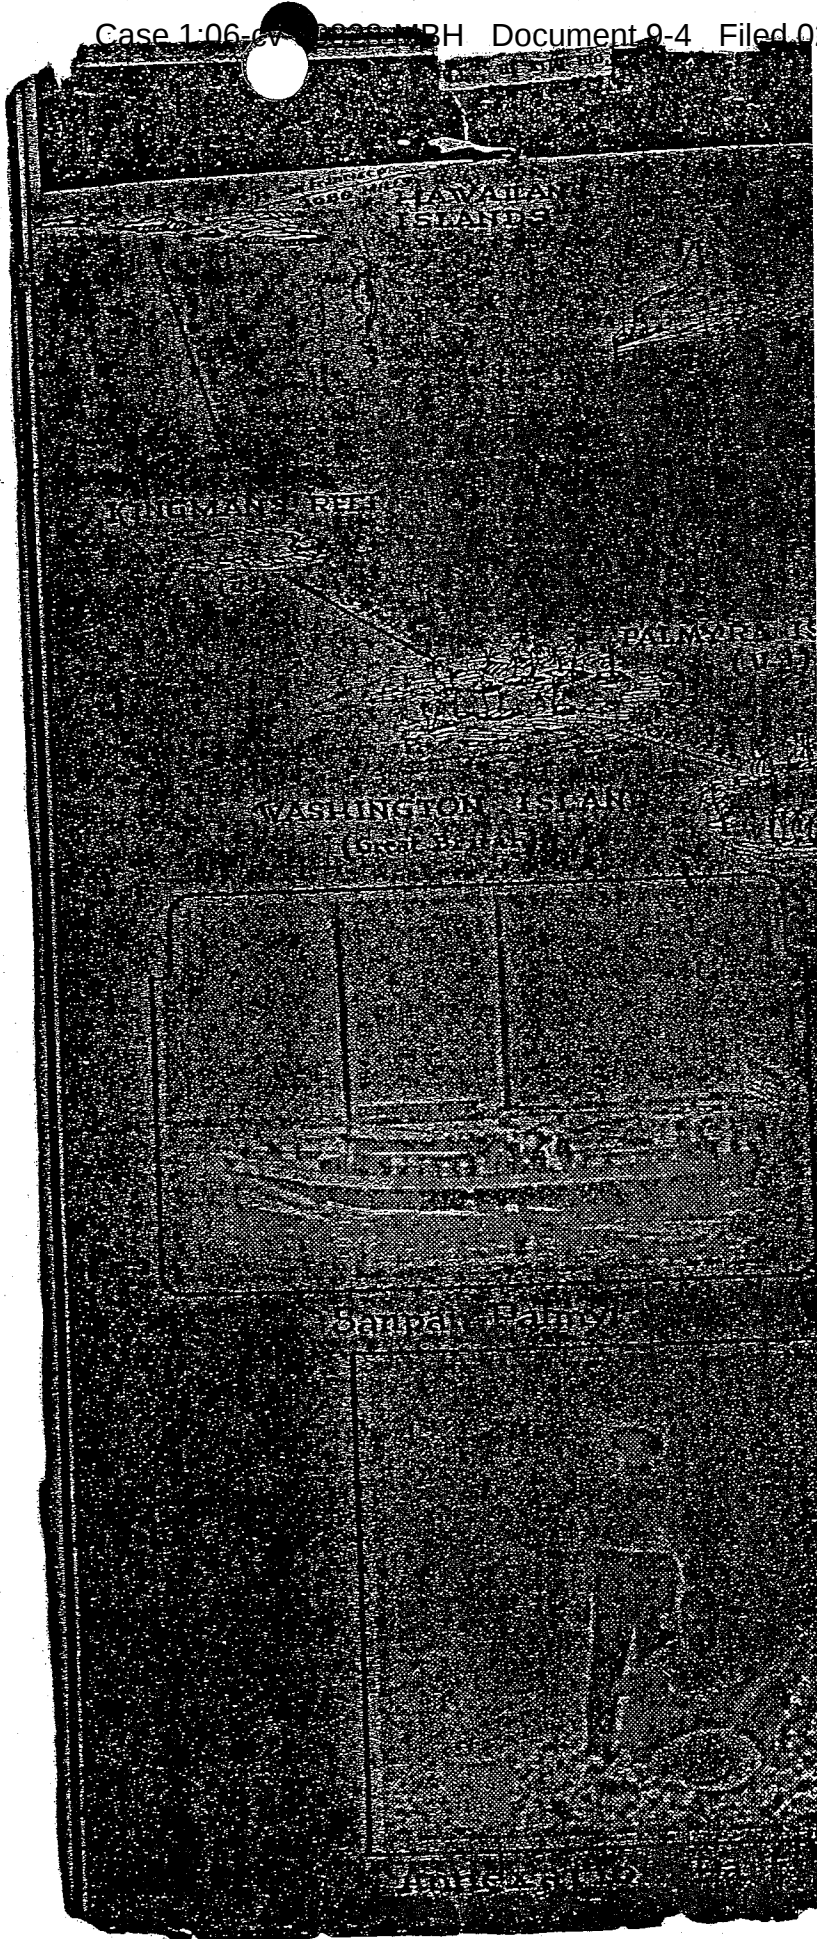

Coming down on the sampan we enjoyed wonderful fishing for red snapper, which were readily caught just as soon as a hook was thrown into the water. They would weigh from four to six pounds each.

"Cocoanut cabbage and land the island, and I find both quite good eating. Cocoanut cabbage is the heart of a cocoanut tree.

"We are living in the Cooper cottage and expect to be all alone here for at least two weeks longer before seeing another outsider."
